...Osgood welcomes its native son

Courier staff report

Col. Robert J. Cline, 92, the retired Indiana State Police officer who adopted Madison as his second home, was remembered Sunday, March 17, in services at the Madison Presbyterian Church as a man who "was the epitome of a state police officer."

Cline was well-known throughout Madison and the state for his dedication and loyalty to ISP, his family, friends, his service to Hanover College and his website, MadisonCameRunning.com

Cline, who died March 8, was laid to rest after the services beside his wife, Rita, at the Greendale Cemetary in Osgood, Indiana, his hometown.

He will fondly be remembered with his many titles, including that of "webmaster."

After officially retiring from law enforcement, Cline moved to this area where he was chief of security for Hanover College for many years, then applied his knowledge of computers to build MadisonCameRunning.com, a website that kept an eye on southeastern Indiana, the Madison Regatta and his fellow law enforcement officers.

About 75 attended the services including ISP Supt. Douglas G. Carter and many Indiana State Police officers, local law enforcement and family and friends. The officers formed an honor guard for Cline, along with units of the Madison Fire Department, that joined his procession to the outskirts of Madison as Cline's remains were taken home to Osgood.

Cline was laid to rest beside his wife, Rita, at the Greendale Cemetary in Osgood. The graveside services included a 21-gun salute by the Major Samuel Woodfill American Legion Post No. 9 of Madison. (Courier staff photo by Tali Hunt/thunt@madisoncourier.com)

"He was the epitome of a state police officer, and he was an officer through and through." said Jim White, a Madison resident who explained that he saw Cline as a second father figure. "I'll miss you dad."

The graveside services included a 21-gun salute by the Major Samuel Woodfill American Legion Post No. 9 of Madison and final words from Cline's granddaughter, Heather, about the many memories and loves she shared with Cline, including jazz.

A lone saxophone player honored Cline with a few songs during the ceremonies in Osgood.

The Madison Courier joined some of Cline's many friends earlier this year when they visited him to catch up with each other and trade memories. Those stories can be found on the Courier website at madisoncourier.com

New report finds 1 of 3 Hoosiers now obese

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A new report shows that Indiana's obesity rate is continuing to climb along with Hoosiers' expanding waistlines.

The report by the Richard M. Fairbanks Foundation shows that one in three Indiana residents are now obese, and that Indiana's obesity rate has risen from 20 percent in 1995 to 34 percent in 2017.

The report said Indiana's obesity epidemic costs the state $8.5 billion annually in lost productivity and economic output and added health care costs.

Claire Fiddian-Green is the president and CEO of the Richard M. Fairbanks Foundation. She told WFYI-TV that research shows obesity is driven by more than just genetics and behavior, and that "where we live, work and play" helps drive obesity.

Fiddian-Green said the data highlights how healthy food access and other factors can influence healthy weight.

The report can be found at https://www.rmff.org/

Student mental health plan compromise with opt-out

By SCOTT L. MILEY
CNHI News Indiana Reporter

INDIANAPOLIS — Less than two days after a major Indiana conservative leader asked hundreds of Hoosiers to oppose student mental health legislation, the Indiana House said the opponent's concerns had been resolved to their satisfaction in another bill.

The issue arose after Eric Miller, founder of the conservative Advance America, spoke to 350 people on Tuesday at Hope Missionary Church in Bluffton. He asked them to notify their legislators that they were opposed to Senate Bill 266, a 40-plus-page piece of legislation that currently sets up mental health evaluations of youth from birth to age 22.

"We passed a compromise on this very issue that I think had nearly unanimous support, Republican, Democrat," House Speaker Brian Bosma, R-Indianapolis, said Thursday.

Miller said the bill would give the state unprecedented control over all children in Indiana, beginning at birth.

Currently, the bill charges the State Commission on Improving the Status of Children with developing plans for a child's social, emotional and behavioral health and coming up with services for a child and the child's family.

"The result would be to label potentially tens of thousands of children, beginning at birth, as not being normal and in need of social, emotional and mental health services and treatment," Miller told the gathering.

Authored in the Senate, the bill addresses the growing concern about mental health treatment for students, brought about in light of recent school violence. In part, the bill establishes a grant program for schools to develop mental health and substance use disorder plans.

"The only way they're going to be able to do that is go right into a hospital or mandate the hospitals to give them the data they need to enter that child into a government database," he said.

The bill passed the Senate 29-20 and has been sent to the House Education Committee, but has not been set for a hearing.

But the issue has been resolved in a House bill, Bosma said.

As an example, under House Bill 1004 the Indiana State Department of Health would conduct an annual survey of youth risk behaviors for students in grades 9 to 12. Parents could opt out of the survey through written notification, as can a school.

The bill passed the House 83-15 and is to be heard Wednesday in front of the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development.

"I'm sure that our author will get together with the Senate author and settle on something that's reasonable," Bosma said, "and what passed the House was reasonable. It gave the schools the opportunity to opt out, it gave families the opportunity to opt out and it wasn't burdensome, I didn't think, on the schools for mental health professionals."

Bosma said he had heard about the Bluffton meeting and that some state senators were discussing the public speech there.

Bosma said, "I just kept my mouth quiet and said we've already solved this."

In the House, State Rep. Tony Cook, R-Cicero, a retired schools superintendent, is a co-sponsor of Senate Bill 266. He was one of the co-authors of House Bill 1004 which could face amendments in the Senate.

"This is the process and hopefully we can soften up and relieve some of those worries but not lose the fact that in this day and age, with the violence and the actions we're seeing, counselors in schools need that kind of help. They're not trained for those aberrant, violent behaviors that sometimes come into the schools and that we see early on where we can intervene and maybe assist the family and the child," Cook said.

Advance America, a Christian-based tax-exempt organization based in Indianapolis, has spoken in support of families and pro-life agendas. It boasts of working relationships with over 2,500 churches in Indiana.

"We don't ask churches to get political," Miller told the gathering. "We ask churches to take a stand on biblical issues and give information to the people in their church. "My job is to give truth to people about things that are going on in their government."

As a Christian lobbying group, Advance America distributed emails to churches and other supporters urging support in 2015 of the state's controversial Religious Freedom Restoration Act, saying "Christian bakers, florists and photographers should not be forced by the government to participate in a homosexual wedding."

Council tells Gibson sheriff to house inmates in other jails

BY ANDREA HOWE
Princeton Daily Clarion

PRINCETON — With a class-action federal lawsuit filed against the county for jail overcrowding and understaffing, Sheriff Tim Bottoms asked the Gibson County Council last week to hire more corrections officers.

But council members asked for a plan for addressing jail conditions, and suggested some of the problems could be eased in the interim by paying other jails to house county inmates.

Two Indiana Department of Correction inspections over the past two years have cited the county jail for overcrowding and understaffing, recommending that 11 correction officers be hired to be fully staffed. The council has allocated money over the past two years to hire five people, and Tuesday, Bottoms asked them to fund six more positions to meet the DOC inspection recommendation.

"What's the plan for the overcrowding?" asked councilman Derek McGraw.

The sheriff reported that judges are working to help ease some of the overcrowding with some early releases and time-served sentences where appropriate.

Commissioner Steve Bottoms said the consulting firm hired to develop a plan to address the problems is expected to present the study findings to commissioners in May.

Councilman Dan Beard asked whether the current positions are fully staffed, and the sheriff said there are two correction officer positions that came open when one officer joined the sheriff's department and another took a position in another city. He estimated it takes about two months to recruit and test candidates.

"We're looking at all options, but the only thing that can be done now is to hire more officers," commissioner Bottoms told the council.

Councilman Jeremy Overton asked whether there's a plan in place to solve the other problems with toilets and beds.

Bottoms reported that some area jails have beds available, but the county would have to pay $35 per inmate per day, plus transport and medical costs.

Councilman Craig Pflug said that while paying other counties to house Gibson County inmates might not be the long-term solution, it is an immediate fix.

McGraw said the county doesn't have an extra $450,000 to $500,000 to spend to immediately hire six more corrections officers.

"Until you have a plan for the building, the only thing to do is to get the census down," Pflug said.

"About 95 percent of the lawsuit is about overcrowding. If we get the right plan in place, we would have to lay off people down the road," McGraw said. "Give us a plan. That's all we're asking for." He reminded commissioners that the county has funded almost half of the additional positions recommended.

"It just seems that to address the immediate issue is to find a place to house inmates," Pflug said.

"You're saying you've got the money to move the people, correct?" the sheriff asked.

"It would be worth trying to solve the immediate problem...and track costs," Pflug suggested.

Council President Jay Riley asked whether there's room in the community corrections building to house some of the inmates. The sheriff said some inmates who qualify are being housed at the work release center.

"This can be taken care of temporarily and that's all we can do," said councilman Bill McConnell. "We authorize you to hire and you can't fill the positions...what can we do working with the judges...to resolve this temporarily? It (jail overcrowding) is all over the state."

Commissioner Bottoms said the commissioners complied with the inspection citations by requesting additional staffing and submitting a plan for addressing the problem, which includes a study of the existing jail design to see what they can do.

"You guys do what you've got to do," the sheriff told the council. "I'm here just asking what the state recommended. You do what you've got to do."

"The quickest way is to find a bed for them," said Pflug.

State moves toward increasing religious objection to abortion

Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS — Lawmakers moved closer to allowing nurses, physician assistants and pharmacists to object on religious or other grounds to having any role in an abortion when the Indiana House voted 69-25 Thursday in favor of the legislation, which would expand the statute for medical professionals who don't want to perform an abortion or participate in any procedure that results in an abortion. That includes prescribing, administering or dispensing an abortion-inducing drug, The (Northwest Indiana) Times reported. State law already authorizes physicians, hospital employees and health clinic staffers to opt out of abortion-related health care based on an ethical, moral or religious objection to abortion. The new measure would extend that option to nurses, physician assistants and pharmacists. Forty-six states now allow some health care providers to refuse to provide abortion services, according to a March analysis by the Guttmacher Institute, which supports abortion rights. The Indiana bill's sponsor, state Rep. Ron Bacon, R-Chandler, said that nurses, physician assistants and pharmacists who aren't directly employed by a hospital or health clinic deserve the same right as other medical professional not to provide medical assistance for terminating a pregnancy if that conflicts with their personal beliefs. Opponents argued that the proposal potentially puts women at risk of death if they are denied care in an emergency situation, or if a pharmacist refuses to provide medication required to complete a miscarriage because it also can be used to induce an abortion. The legislation now returns to the Senate to determine if that chamber consents to a technical change made by the House. If the measure is re-approved, it will go to Republican Gov. Eric Holcomb, who is expected to sign it into law.

Probation in state voter fraud case

ANDERSON — A man has been sentenced to a year of probation after pleading guilty to 30 misdemeanor counts of voter registration fraud stemming from allegations before the 2018 primary election. The Herald Bulletin reported Datwaon Collier, 28, of Anderson entered the pleas Friday in Madison Circuit Court Division 6 in an agreement with Madison County prosecutors. Collier also must perform 50 hours of community service. He said he had no felony convictions on his record. He earlier apologized. A probable cause affidavit said the investigation was started when Republican and Democratic party representatives in the voter registration office reported that 30 registrations were potentially invalid. Collier allegedly was collecting registrations for a state House candidate but included made-up addresses and signed registration forms himself.

Neil Armstrong exhibit at Purdue

WEST LAFAYETTE — An exhibit of astronaut Neil Armstrong's personal papers is opening at Purdue University ahead of the 50th anniversary of his famed walk on the moon. "Apollo 11 in the Archives: Selections from the Neil A. Armstrong Papers" opens Monday at Purdue's Humanities, Social Science, and Education Library and continues until Aug. 16. Purdue is home to hundreds of thousands of personal documents, memorabilia and photos from the 1955 Purdue graduate's life. That includes about 70,000 pages of fan mail Armstrong received after he became the first human to walk on the moon on July 20, 1969. The Ohio native made his famous walk after he manually landed the Apollo 11 lander to avoid a large lunar crater that could have doomed the mission. Armstrong died in 2012 at 82.

Trail rising along former railroad corridor

BLOOMINGTON — Monroe County has begun work on a new recreational trail that will follow the former Illinois Central Railroad corridor. Contractors hired by Monroe County began clearing trees last week along the planned Limestone Greenway. Construction of the 1.7-mile-long trail is expected to cost more than $950,000. County parks and recreation director Kelli Witmer told The Herald-Times that while the trail will be paved, it will have a more rural feel than the existing B-Line Trail and it will not have lighting along its route. Witmer said the trail's development was partly made possible by a property swap between the City of Bloomington and Monroe County. The Indiana Rail Road Co. Inc. purchased the Illinois Central Railroad lines in 1986. Those lines were vacated a couple of years later.

Unvaccinated student sues after benching

WALTON — An unvaccinated student at a school trying to contain a chickenpox outbreak is suing because he's been barred from extracurricular activities. News outlets reported Jerome Kunkle, 18, is accusing the Northern Kentucky Health Department of violating his First Amendment rights. More than 30 Our Lady of Assumption Academy students have fallen ill since February. The department said Friday that students without proof of vaccination or immunity against chickenpox can't attend school or its activities until 21 days after the last infection. Kunkle and his father, Bill, say vaccines violate their religious beliefs because cell lines derived from aborted fetuses are involved in their production. The National Catholic Bioethics Center said these vaccines don't actually contain aborted cells, so Catholics are "morally free" to use them to protect human life.

Greenbo Lake gets brown trout stocking

FRANKFORT — Another lake has been added to the state Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources' brown trout stocking program. The agency says the 176-acre Greenbo Lake received its first stocking of brown trout in February. Fish and Wildlife Resources stocked 2,000 brown trout in the lake. Brown trout were stocked last spring for the first time in Cannon Creek Lake in Bell County and Fagan Branch Lake in Marion County. This month, Cannon Creek Lake will receive 3,000 brown trout and Fagan Branch Lake will receive 1,000 brown trout. The three lakes will also receive rainbow trout stockings. Cannon Creek Lake will receive 6,000 rainbow trout this year, Greenbo Lake 11,000 and Fagan Branch Lake 1,500. Assistant Fisheries Director Dave Dreves says the brown trout won't reach harvestable size for several years.

Ag Department sponsors FFA contest

FRANKFORT — The Kentucky Agriculture Department is sponsoring a contest for Kentucky FFA members who are involved in producing and selling farm commodities or products. Participants have to produce and market fruits, vegetables, flowers, eggs, meat, fish, poultry, dairy or value-added products through farmers' markets, roadside markets or on-farm markets. To participate, a written marketing plan is required, as well as a portfolio with photos of the farm operation, products

Anderson school board seek 15% of annual TIF revenues

By KEN De La BASTIDE
(Anderson) Herald Bulletin

ANDERSON — The Anderson Community Schools Board of Trustees is requesting 15 percent of the Tax Increment Financing revenues from the city of Anderson.

School board member Jeff Barranco at the Anderson City Council meeting Thursday read a letter from ACS Board President Patrick Hill indicating the school system is entitled to 15 percent of the annual TIF revenues.

In his letter, Hill said school systems around the state are seeking to claim some of the lost income.

At the ARC meeting, Barranco said ACS lost $1.9 million through the TIF district that could have been used in the classroom in 2018.

"I was told this request was dead on arrival," he said Tuesday. "The school system has lost $2 million a year.

"We are not going away," Barranco said. "We have a right to ask for the money. The Redevelopment Commission can ignore the request, but we will take the message elsewhere. This is us drawing a line in the sand."

During the city council meeting, Anderson Mayor Thomas Broderick Jr. said half of the current TIF district in the city is part of the South Madison Community School Corporation district.

"State law allows the Redevelopment Commission to contract with an entity, including school corporations, for programs outlined in the statute," he said. "It is meant to promote economic development after certain findings."

Broderick said 15 percent is the maximum amount that can be spent on any proposal.

"There has been no proposal from ACS for a specific program," he said. "I'm a huge supporter of the public school system. It takes years to develop a TIF district that brings investment to the city."

Councilman Greg Graham, D-at large, said TIF is not a simple program.

"It gives Anderson and our citizens a new future," he said. "TIF is responsible for the growth that has created up to 4,000 jobs."

Randy Harrison, president of the Anderson Federation of Teachers, said former ACS board member Keith Millikan said TIF districts would harm public education.

He blamed some of the lost revenues for local units of government on the property tax caps implemented by the Indiana General Assembly.

"We are starving financially," Harrison said. "This school district in a few years could be the next Muncie or Gary."

The Indiana Department of Education took over the operations of the Muncie and Gary school systems in 2018 because of financial problems.

Local resident Tim Perry said without TIF, there would not be growth in Anderson.

"This is an investment," he said.

School bus driver charged with DUI

CRESTWOOD — Police have charged a bus driver with drunken driving after a bus with 33 elementary school students on board crashed. No one was injured. News outlets report Lesley Harvey, 54, was charged Friday with operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol, failure to report an accident, leaving the scene of an accident, and 33 counts of wanton endangerment. The Oldham County police department said in a news release the bus carrying Crestwood Elementary School students hit a security barrier near a subdivision. Harvey reported the accident to her supervisor but said there was no damage and continued on her route. Police say school officials then ordered Harvey to stop. She was transported to a hospital for a breath test. School officials then contacted police.

Newborn delivered after mom killed

LONDON — Police say a newborn girl has been delivered after the fatal shooting of her pregnant mother. Kentucky State Police said in a news release Sunday that Geri D. Johnson, 29, of Williamsburg was pronounced dead Saturday at Baptist Health Corbin Hospital. The pregnant woman had been taken to the emergency room with a gunshot wound. The statement said the infant was delivered and transferred to the University of Kentucky Medical Center in critical condition. Police say an autopsy on Johnson's body is planned and the shooting remains under investigation.

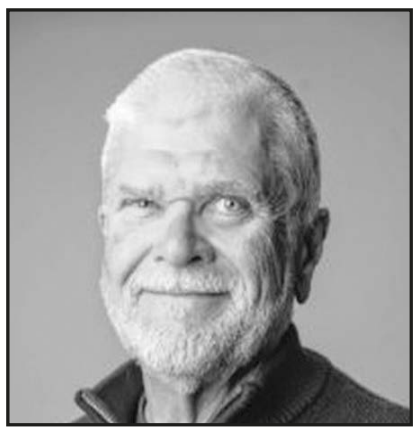
The conundrum of coffee shop Wi-Fi leeches

By BUD HERRON
(Columbus) The Republic



BUD HERRON

I am not an attorney, and therefore have limited knowledge of Indiana common law, but I doubt seats in coffee shops can be claimed via "squatters' rights."

Unless a person who is Wi-Fi leeching on a laptop in a coffee shop (usually while nursing a single, small, café macchiato all day) can prove the seat was abandoned, and unless the squatter is willing to sit there continuously for a minimum of 10 years while paying property taxes on the seat, he or she has no case for ownership.

If I am correct in this legal research, all the internet squatters, who are forcing charge-card-in-hand customers to drink their skinny vanilla lattes standing up, will soon be evicted — maybe even prosecuted and placed in public stocks on the courthouse lawns around the state.

The situation here in Columbus is not dire at this point, but if the coffee shops in places like Bloomington, Carmel and Indianapolis are any indication, caffeine addicts may soon be doing espresso shots in alleys rather than waiting for a place to sit down.

In February, the owners of one popular café bistro in Indianapolis became so incensed over the tsunami of Wi-Fi freeloaders crowding out paying customers that laptops were banned from the shop 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekends. In addition, anyone bringing a laptop into the bistro at any time is now required to purchase a minimum of $5 worth of drinks or food each hour.

If these new rules come into vogue, millions of laptop-toting workers across the country could be forced into renting expensive offices and paying for high speed internet. Millions of students might end up in the college library or forced into dormitory rooms to study. And millions of people who just want to cruise the internet or comment on their friends' idiotic Facebook posts will have to wait until they get home.

As sad as such displacement will be for some, the Eighth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution says private property shall not "be taken for public use without just compensation." I am not sure how the Supreme Court will eventually rule on the issue, but I am fairly certain James Madison had the problem of turning privately owned coffee shops into public computer labs in mind when he wrote the original draft.

Of course, many Americans don't seem to see either the squatter invasion or the possibility of brew battles between café owners and internet leeches as any sort of a national emergency.

I understand that. The old traditional American coffee shop/diner had its charm. Many Americans — particularly outside urban areas — not only prefer the traditional coffee shops but look down their noses at the newer variety as overpriced havens for "city elites."

I have many friends who have never waited in line for the first Pumpkin Spice or Eggnog Latte of the season. To them, coffee is a "cuppa joe" served in a squatty, cream colored ceramic mug with a chip on one side next to a faint smudge of lipstick the dishwasher missed. They say the coffee is delivered right to their booth by a waitress (not a server) who has a plastic nameplate inscribed "Betty" pinned to her apron.

Betty serves the coffee for $1.25 with unlimited refills — although some days the coffee is a bit scorched from sitting in the carafe keeping warm since breakfast.

On the plus side, no one has a laptop and no one sits in the cafe all day hogging the seats while she sends reports to the home office or he writes an essay for Composition 101.

In fact, Big Joe the cook wouldn't think twice about tossing a squatter out into the parking lot — not only for having a laptop but for ordering a café macchiato.

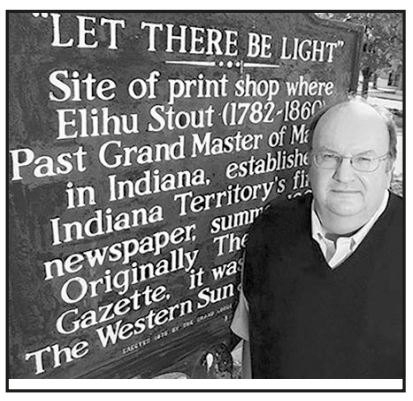
Let There Be Light: I own up to being 'too picky'

By GAYLE R. ROBBINS
Vincennes Sun-Commercial



GAYLE ROBBINS

Early on in my career I had a town council member, who literally had known me all my life, complain with a good deal of undisguised displeasure that I was just "too picky" in how I went about covering local government in our hometown.

What, in his opinion, I had been overly finicky about was calling the local council, which was made up of three basically good men (even perhaps in their own ways well-meaning), on a quite obvious and ongoing violation of the state's Open Door Law.

Admittedly, the law was still in its short pants, and I'm not altogether sure whether, up until that moment, any of them had actually ever read the law; if they had, what they'd read didn't take.

To them, holding what were basically unannounced town council meetings in a back room of Town Hall in the middle of the day was just an efficient way to get town business done.

Public meetings, by contrast, were social occasions to be concluded as quickly and with as much bonhomie as was possible.

So my brashness in calling them out, first in person and then eventually in print, was as unwelcome as it was unanticipated — a betrayal, by a native son no less, of what had up until my arrival been a system which, at least on the surface, seemed to be working to everyone's benefit, especially if you were one of the couple of contractors who seemed to always be low-bidder on the latest expensive public-works project.

I own up to being "too picky" when it comes to demanding open government, because I see openness — the public's right to know — as the capstone of democratic government.

If unfailing devotion to the First Amendment (even when such piety gives me the willies) is my personal faith, then stubborn belief in the absolute necessity of open government is my professional creed — even when, as it sometimes does, make for an uncomfortable homecoming.

Today wraps up Sunshine Week, an annual celebration by journalists of our being defenders of the public's right to know — of open government. That's how I see it, anyway.

Others of the brethren have used the week to bemoan the current state of affairs with these attacks on journalists by politicians, led in large part by the president.

I wish it were otherwise.

Being a journalist means doing work that's not always appreciated, work of great importance that goes unnoticed, and sometimes even work that makes those in power quiver with anger — or in fear.

When that happens, there's a reaction, an effort to deflect the impact of being caught out.

An historian's training comforts me in knowing that what transpires today is only the latest round in a long accounting of attacks on "the media" — and it's hardly the worst period in the life-story of the nation. Not by a long shot.

What is new, or at least disconcerting to an old newspaper hound like me, is this feeling among some of my media colleagues of being persecuted for the work they do — a feeling they should be given special treatment for what they do.

I suppose there is in everyone some innate desire to be popular, to always be loved, and by everyone. But to be always loved is impossible, no matter what your work happens to be. Not even Jesus could manage it.

Often in the newspaper business the work is downright unpleasant. When I talk with younger colleagues or with students looking at journalism as a career, that's usually at the top of the list — a warning to be prepared from time to time to undertake some unpleasant work. I tell them that like the late Ben Bradlee, one day they may be lucky enough to get thrown down a flight of stairs; they, too, will become a legend and their career made.

I've never had that happen to me, by the way, and probably won't; I've put on a lot of weight since I started in the business, so any effort to try throwing me down the stairs now just wouldn't be worth it.

The work is not always bad. There's also great joy to be found in being in the newspaper business, in helping readers to learn about, to understand, and to care about the world around them, whether the boundaries run to just down the block or stretch halfway around the world.

Indiana Senate Bill 105 would shed light on redistricting

By KELLY HAWES
CNHI News Indiana Columnist

KELLY HAWES

Redistricting reform advocates entered this year's session of the Indiana General Assembly with high hopes.

They'd been traveling the state to drum up support for a citizen-led redistricting commission. They wanted to take politics out of the process, to put citizens in charge of drawing the boundaries of legislative and congressional districts, and they were hoping this would be the year their efforts finally paid off.

It won't be.

The bill that would have created that commission failed to get out of committee. Instead, reform advocates have been left with an alternative measure, Senate Bill 105.

The bill sponsored by Republican state Sen. Greg Walker of Columbus would require lawmakers to create geographically compact districts that keep together communities of interest. The measure also would prohibit lawmakers from considering where incumbents live in drawing district lines, and it would bring much needed transparency, requiring a public explanation of any deviation from those guidelines.

Supporters acknowledge the bill isn't what they wanted. Still, it's a step in the right direction.

What we really need is to take politics out of the equation. We need maps drawn with a goal of producing competitive elections.

Clearly, not every district can be like that. Some will always be lopsided toward one party or the other.

The fact remains that way too many districts are drawn with the goal of giving one party the advantage. Elections in those districts are effectively over in the primary, and that means the winners rarely see a need to compromise.

They find themselves catering exclusively to the base of their parties. Keep the base happy, and you stay in office. Reach across the aisle, and you might find yourself on the outside looking in.

The result is a loss of moderate voices.

Maybe one of these days, Indiana politicians will hand over control of this process. For now, though, SB 105 is the only game in town.

One of the bill's co-sponsors is Sen. John Ruckelshaus, an Indianapolis Republican who has long supported redistricting reform.

In fact, support for this cause runs in the Ruckelshaus family. Ruckelshaus recently talked about a newspaper clipping he had received in the mail concerning a Sen. Ruckelshaus who was a champion of redistricting reform.

The article was from 1956, and the senator in question was the current senator's father.

Ruckelshaus knows all about gerrymandering. When the Democrats were in charge of drawing the maps, he found himself drawn out of his own district.

To his credit, Ruckelshaus continues to push for reform even now when his party has a stranglehold on the levers of power in Indiana.

We can't say as much for House Speaker Brian Bosma (R-Indiananapols), who once was a vocal advocate for reform. When the Democrats were in charge of the House, Bosma promised voters that when it regained control his party would create a bipartisan redistricting commission. He criticized the Democrats for refusing to join the effort.

Now, it's the Democrats calling for reform, while Bosma's commitment seems to have waned.

The clock on this reform effort is ticking. New district lines will be drawn in 2021, and reform advocates know that time is running out if they are going to push through any changes ahead of this once-a-decade process.

An interim study committee in 2016 recommended doing what Bosma had promised to do, but legislation to make it happen went nowhere.

Thus, we have the bill now pending in the House Elections and Apportionment Committee.

Last year, a similar measure failed even to get a hearing in that committee.

Will this year be any different? We'll find out soon.

U.S. Forest Service plans prescribed burns in 5 counties

(Bedford) Times-Mail

BEDFORD — The U.S. Forest Service will soon be conducting prescribed burns to maintain, restore or improve early successional habitat, maintain wetlands, restore unique barrens ecosystems and regenerate oak and hickory. Prescribed burns also reduce fuel loads, thereby lowering the risk of wildfire impacts.

Because of the overly moist and cold conditions in the fall, many planned burns had to be postponed until this spring. Approximately 20 prescribed burns are planned for the following counties: Jackson, Martin, Orange, Perry and Crawford. The sizes of the areas to be burned vary, with the largest area being 1,120 acres. Specific recreation sites that will be affected include: Fork Ridge Trails, Mogan Ridge Trails (both east and west), portions of Oriole Trail (east of State Road 66), Indian-Celina Lakes Recreation Area (the access road to Indian Lake and the south section of Two Lakes Loop Trail).

U.S. Forest Service fire managers work closely with the National Weather Service to determine the best days to burn to achieve the goals and to maximize safety. Many specific conditions must be met for a burn to occur, including fuel moisture, wind speed and direction, relative humidity, etc. Decisions are generally made the day of once parameters have been measured or forecasted, so advance specific notification is difficult. Forest staff notifies the public in the immediate area of the prescribed burn.

All designated burn areas will be closed to the public on the day of the burn and for some time after the burn until the area is considered safe. If there are a significant number of burning trees in the interior of a burn area, the area may be closed for several days for public safety. Burning this spring could extend into spring turkey hunting season. For your safety, check with dispatch (812-547-9262) if you plan to hunt or camp in or near prescribed burn areas.

If forest neighbors wish to know the specific date of the ignition, they can call the forest dispatch office to be informed once the decision is made to burn. Anyone with medical issues who might be affected by smoke, such as asthma or emphysema, who live immediately around where a prescribed burn is planned, is encouraged to contact the forest service. Fuels specialist, Jeremy Kolaks states, "We want to do everything we can to minimize effects on our neighbors."

For questions on the prescribed burns, to request notification, or to report medical conditions please contact the Indiana Interagency Coordination Center Dispatcher at 812-547-9262. Geo-referenced maps of the burn areas and additional details are available at inciweb.nwcg.gov/incident/6246/.

The mission of the U.S. Forest Service, an agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, is to sustain the health, diversity and productivity of the nation's forests and grasslands to meet the needs of present and future generations. The agency manages 193 million acres of public land, provides assistance to state and private landowners and maintains the largest forestry research organization in the world.

A sure sign spring is arriving: Turkey vultures back in March Indiana skies

By JOHN FLORA
Lebanon Reporter

The turkey vultures are back, soaring through March Indiana skies, as they have for millennia.

These harbingers of spring typically return to Indiana a few days before the Vernal Equinox — some returning to longtime roosts and others stopping in transit to roosts farther north.

The turkey vulture is second only to condors and eagles in the ranking of North America's birds and is a common sight in Indiana.

Neil Sabine, associate professor of biology at Indiana University East at Richmond, has been studying turkey vultures since the mid-1990s. He's trapped more than 200 birds and marked them and collaborated with the U.S. Air Force on a study on turkey vulture strikes on jet aircraft.

Turkey vultures don't kill anything. They won't touch anything that isn't dead. Besides that, they will pass on dead carnivores like dogs, cats and coyotes, preferring to dine on dead herbivores like sheep, goats and cattle. Turkey vultures have keen eyesight to help them find food, bald heads to keep them cleaner when eating and harsh stomach acid to help them digest carrion.

The Cherokees called the turkey vulture the "peace eagle" because it soars like the predatory bird but does not kill.

They are about 25 inches from end to end with a six-foot wingspan. The average adult turkey vulture weighs in at 4 pounds.

The annual return of turkey vultures to Indiana, Sabine said, is temperature-dependent.

"If we have a hard winter, they'll stay south longer," he said. "This year we had a colder winter so the birds will come late because they move based on availability of food."

If their food sources are frozen, they can't get at the interior of a dead animal because they have weak bills. They need a food source that is soft and available to them, he explained.

After wintering in South or Central America, they return to northern nesting areas in two waves — transitory birds that may stop over in Indiana for perhaps two or three weeks before moving on — and permanent residents that will nest and remain in one particular area throughout the warm weather months, leaving as winter approaches in November or December.

"Some resident turkey vultures will stay all winter and go just far enough south where warmer weather is accessible, just kind of shifting with the weather," Sabine said. "Others will go all the way across the Caribbean to South America. Most of the birds we're seeing are from southern Mexico. The turkey vulture has the largest distribution of any bird in the world," he said, noting that the birds are still expanding their range northward, moving into Canada.

In connection with the Air Force study, Sabine said turkey vultures can attain an altitude of nearly 1,000 feet if thermal updrafts are sufficient.

Bill Kohlmoos, president of the Turkey Vulture Society, wrote on his website, turkeyvulturesociety.wordpress.com, that they have a rich social life, like to play aerial tag, and will invite other roosts to join them if they find a particularly large meal.

In California, he said, they've even been known to tell condors about major feasts and guide them to the scene.

"One lady wrote us that she has built a small wooden tower-like feeder in her back yard and puts out food for her friends each day," Kohlmoos wrote. "One day she noticed that after eating their breakfast, the vultures had gone down to the lawn in her yard and six of them were in a circle around a soccer-size ball left on the lawn by her grandchildren. The vultures were hitting the ball back and forth to each other by butting it with their head and beak. Each day thereafter they played this game. And although there were four balls of different colors, they always picked the orange one."

Kohlmoos also learned that turkey vultures are affectionate and often make good pets. "When a bird is injured and taken into rehab, he will become emotionally attached to his handler and follow him around and watch him, much like a pet dog. They love to bring an object to a person and then play tug-of-war."

"A lady in Southern California wrote that she and her husband would drive their car five miles from town and take a daily walk in the country with their dog," Kohlmoos wrote. "A turkey vulture would join them, soaring above and watching them. And then one day at home she broke a leg and the walks were not possible for a while.

One day she was in her back yard on crutches and there was her turkey vulture sitting on the fence, waiting to say hello. He had found her in a town of 12,000 people."

Turkey vultures are covered by an international migratory bird treaty that makes it a federal crime to kill or injure them or to possess one without the appropriate permit as a wildlife rehabilitator.

Holcomb hopes to fund teacher pay hike; 4% over next two years

By KEN De La BASTIDE
(Anderson) Herald Bulletin

CHESTERFIELD – Raising teacher pay in the Hoosier State to attract educators from surrounding states is the hope of Gov. Eric Holcomb.

Holcomb was in Madison County on Saturday for the annual Republican Party Lincoln Day Dinner.

"We're taking a two-step approach to this," Holcomb said during an interview with The Herald Bulletin. "We're addressing it immediately and long term.

"Every two years during the budget discussions we talk about how we can systemically change the system to pay our teachers an attractive wage," he said.

During his annual State of the State address in January, Holcomb proposed a 2 percent increase in the first year and another 2 percent in the second year of the state's two-year budget cycle.

He said the state would provide the funding for the 4 percent salary increase that would be directly sent to the school corporations.

The local school systems will make the final decision on how those funds are distributed among teachers.

According to the National Education Association website, the average teacher was paid $50,715 in Indiana in 2016. A 4 percent raise over two years would raise the average to $52,763.

"Because we're in such good financial shape," Holcomb said, "we have about 12 percent in our cash reserves and need 11 percent to protect our AAA credit rating.

"I have proposed drawing down $150 million and send it directly to the schools to pay off a pension liability they currently have," he said.

Holcomb said that will "free up" additional funding for local school systems to use toward teacher salaries.

The state does not pay teacher salaries — the school systems do — which is where the collective bargaining takes places on contracts, he said.

Holcomb said Indiana spends more than 50 percent of the state budget on education.

"I've pulled together a task force to look at all the state and federal dollars that go into our K-12 education system," he said. "How do we change the system to make our state in an enviable position of having teachers move to Indiana from other Midwestern states?"

"There is a teacher shortage all over the country," Holcomb continued. "Because the economy is growing, teachers are attractive to business because they are educated, trusted and trainable."

Commenting on efforts the past few years to establish a redistricting commission comprised of citizens, Holcomb said he is keeping an open mind.

The Indiana General Assembly has been considering legislation to create a redistricting commission; although it has some support among Republicans, it has failed to get a hearing in the Indiana House.

Lawmakers will be tasked with creating the congressional and Indiana General Assembly districts in 2021 for the 2022 election cycle.

"This has long been the jurisdiction of the legislature," Holcomb said of driving the district lines. "I'm very open-minded if we can make the system truly fair. I want to see that proposal."

Holcomb said around the United States commissions have been created but haven't accomplished the desired results.

"We can try to get some non-partisan folks to draw the lines," he said. "Show me that non-partisan person. You can name judges or university presidents, but some of these have a political heritage."

Holcomb said the state has to determine how computers can help to ensure the district lines are drawn fairly by keeping communities together and pass constitutional muster.

"I want to see more evidence of where our legislative districts are gerrymandered," he said. "How is it that Republicans have 89 percent of the county commissioners and the GOP has a majority of county sheriffs, a majority of statewide elective offices," he said. "Those are not gerrymandered."

Indiana opening first new state psychiatric hospital in 53 years

By SCOTT L. MILEY

INDIANAPOLIS — About 1,500 Hoosiers are expected to be served annually by the new NeuroDiagnostic Institute and Advanced Treatment Center.

The facility, Indiana's first new psychiatric hospital in over 50 years, is equipped with virtual reality, light therapy and brain imaging rooms.

"To give you an idea of the significance of expanding psychiatric services, it has been 53 years since Indiana has done what we're doing today," said Dr. Jennifer Walthall, secretary of the Indiana Family and Social Services Administration.

On Friday, FSSA sponsored a ribbon-cutting, attended by more than 200, to open the $118 million facility, known as NDI.

Built next to Community Hospital East in Indianapolis, the 159-bed long-term care facility will offer treatment for adults and children who have complex neuropsychiatric illnesses. The goal is to reintegrate patients into the community or the state mental health system, which includes six psychiatric hospitals.

Patient referrals will come from community mental health centers, other state hospitals and court judges. Patients are to be accepted in the next few weeks, officials said. About 50 patients will be transferred from Indianapolis' Larue Carter Memorial Hospital, which is being shuttered.

NDI, with a $30 million annual operating budget, will have a staff of about 500, including seven psychiatrists, 80 nurses and at least 200 behavioral health rehabilitation attendants.

NDI's chief medical officer, Dr. Jerry Sheward, worked 25 years with Aspire Indiana, which has mental health treatment facilities in Anderson, Lebanon, Carmel, Noblesville and Elwood. At Aspire, Sheward helped develop a tele-medicine plan for rural patient access to psychiatrists.

"This building is very technology heavy, so those kind of prior experiences are really helpful," Sheward said.

In rooms where patients will be monitored, doors have window blinds controlled from the hallway. To prevent suicides, rooms and bathrooms have been designed so a patient can't wrap a belt or blanket around a hook; sinks have push buttons and handrails have no opening between the rail and wall.

For privacy, an enclosed playground for children has been built on a roof. An outdoor picnic area is on a sixth-floor balcony protected by fencing. Lighting is circadian, designed to control the intensity and color of lights.

There's a sliding panel in one relaxation area that closes access to a water fountain to protect patients with a water consumption disorder.

Special treatment rooms are set up for programs such as anti-depression stimulation using magnets, and there's a monitoring room for patients who suffer seizures.

A vacant room is set up — but not operational — for ketamine infusion therapy, which has been controversial for treatment of severe depression and suicidal tendencies. NDI will not initially use that infusion therapy, Sheward said.

Sven Schumacher is CEO of Lutheran Child and Family Services, located about a block from NDI. The facility includes Lutherwood, which serves behavioral or emotional impairment patients from the ages of 6 to 31.

"We are super excited about it because at Lutherwood we have young people that are waiting for placement or they could step down to our facility. It is very, very important," he said while touring the NDI facility.

Sheward hopes NDI's opening will elevate Indiana's reputation for psychiatric care.

"Community mental health centers and acute care hospitals don't necessarily see the state of Indiana as being a resource in providing longer-term care. This is an attempt to correct that situation," Sheward said.

Zion-powered Duke overall top seed for March Madness

By EDDIE PELLS
AP National Writer

The clock is ticking. The rest of college basketball has three weeks to figure out how to stop Duke's freshman force of nature, Zion Williamson.

Williamson and the Blue Devils got the overall top seed in the tournament, while Gonzaga and two more Atlantic Coast Conference teams — North Carolina and Virginia — also received No. 1 seeds. Three teams in one conference on the top line matches a record, and offers the selection committee's guess as to who has the best chance to slow down Duke.

The Blue Devils opened as a 9-4 favorite to win it all.

Williamson, the 6-foot-7 man-child averaging 22 points and nine rebounds and a near-certain top pick in the upcoming NBA draft, is putting his future on the line — along with hundreds of millions in potential earnings — all in hopes of adding his own chapter to the history of America's most dream-indulged hoops extravaganza. He's doing it only four weeks after wrenching his knee when his Nike sneaker blew out and sent him crashing to the floor. He missed five games. He wouldn't dare miss this.

"Everybody has their right to their own opinion, but I knew I was coming back the whole time," Williamson said in his return last week, when he led Duke to its 21st ACC tournament title.

Speaking of shoes ... the companies that make them are intrinsically, financially and, yes, toxically intertwined with the players who fill out Division I rosters. The tournament will once again be played against the backdrop of a long list of problems — most of them related to money — that plague the NCAA and college hoops.

LSU is the latest to have its name dragged through the mud, yet neither the NCAA nor the school appeared to think twice about placing the Tigers in a starring role the drama, which begins Tuesday with a pair of play-in games, then gets going in full force on Thursday.

The Tigers were given the No. 3 seed in the East, a mere two weeks after details emerged about their coach, on a wiretap , talking to a recruiting middleman about a "strong ass offer" he made to a high schooler. If true, coach Will Wade clearly violated NCAA rules — in fact, The NCAA Rule: Thou Shalt Not Pay Players.

But while Wade has been banished to the sideline for the time being, the Tigers will be at the party.

"That's an institutional decision," Stanford athletic director Bernard Muir, the chair of the selection committee, said last week.

(Muir has other issues: Stanford's sailing coach was among those charged last week in the giant pay-for-admissions scandal involving small sports at a handful of universities.)

And yet, despite the sordid headlines and the requisite amount of pre-tournament nose-holding, the next three weeks are certain to inspire and amaze us.

Will this year's magic come from 14th-seeded Old Dominion, whose coach, Jeff Jones, buried his face in a towel as the Monarchs were wrapping up their title in the Conference USA tournament Saturday, then revealed he's battling prostate cancer?

Or from the UC Irvine Anteaters, the 13th seed in the South who are as good as any team in California this season and have as much pedigree: guard Max Hazzard is UCLA legend Walt Hazzard's grandson, and guard Spencer Rivers is coach Doc Rivers' son?

Busy weekend for Hanover as spring sports heat up

Men's lacrosse gets first win in new HCLC

COURIER STAFF REPORT
sports@madisoncourier.com

Hanover men's lacrosse was on opposite ends of blowouts in a pair of games over the weekend.

On Saturday, the Panthers lost 16-7 to Kean (N.J.) in a match played at Bellarmine University in Louisville.

HANOVER LAX

On Sunday, Hanover hammered Earlham 18-4 for its first win in the new Heartland Collegiate Lacrosse Conference.

Hanover led for most of the first quarter against Kean, taking a 1-0 lead on a goal by Ian Kimmins at the 13:46 mark, but Kean tied the score 1-1 near the end of the frame, added six more in the second to lead 7-2 and exploded for nine more in the second half to pull away.

Kimmins led Hanover with four goals and two assists on six shots on goal while Bret Schell had two goals and an assist, Jackson Wheeler had a goal, Noah King had two assists and Dallas Fonner had an assist.

Noah Dubrava stopped a season-high 18 shots in goal for the Panthers in the loss.

Kean had an 18-11 edge at the faceoff and a 38-26 margin in groundballs and 47-21 advantage in total shots. The Panthers had 19 saves to the Cougars' eight.

Hanover had a quick turnaround and made the most of it by hammering Earlham on Sunday.

King scored the first of his team-high five goals at the 11:49 mark and the Panthers kept piling on the scores, leading 6-2 after the first quarter and 8-2 at halftime. The Panthers added 10 more markers in the second half.

King scored a career-high five goals and had three assists to tie his single-game high of eight points that he accomplished last season. Schell had a quartet of assists and a pair of scores to tie his personal-best of six points in a contest.

Schell also led Hanover with 10 groundballs, while going 18-of-19 in faceoffs. Kimmins, Fonner, Wheeler, Dirk Meinhart and Patrick Boylston each hit the back of the net twice while Al Alessia had one goal. Fonner has now scored at least one point in 22 consecutive matches.

Defensively, Fonner, Eric Clay and Andrew Trachtman caused a pair of turnovers each, with Clay also grabbing eight groundballs. Dubrava had six saves in goal and Sean O'Meara had five.

As a unit, Hanover was 23-for-25 on faceoffs leading to a 44-27 margin in groundballs and a 56-22 gap in shots.

Hanover (4-3, 1-1 HCLC) hosts Fontbonne (Mo.) on Saturday, March 23.

Hanover's Noah King (above, 20) takes aim on the goal from close range as Earlham goalkeeper Blake Francis (18) and another defender try to defend the shot. King scored five goals and had three assits in the Panthers' 18-4 win on Sunday — Hanover's first in the new Heartland Conference Lacrosse League. Women fall 17-3 to Albion

Meg Finn scored twice but Hanover women's lacrosse lost 17-3 loss to Albion (Mich.) at home on Sunday.

Finn, a junior from Newburgh, tallied her second multi-score game of the season, giving her six goals on the season. Classmate Emma Boomershine added her 15th goal of the spring as well.

Hanover picked up a goal from Boomershine on a free position attempt at the 18:30 mark of the first half, tying the contest at 1-1. However, the Britons (4-2) fired off seven unanswered goals to close the first half and take an 8-1 lead into the break.

Finn tallied the first of her two second half goals at 26:36, pulling Hanover to within six at 8-2. However, that was as close as the Panthers would get as Albion outscored the Panthers 9-2 over the final 30 minutes. The junior added her second goal at the 11:08 mark of the second half off an assist from senior Rachel Davis.

Finn paced the Panthers with six attempts, while Kinna Laymon added four tries. Julia Long had a team-high six groundballs to go along with 19 saves in goal, one off her career-best mark.

Hanover (2-4) opened Heartland Collegiate Lacrosse Conference play at Earlham on Monday. The Panthers will travel to Trine on Wednesday.

Hanover T&F records fall as teams shift focus outdoors

Trimpe re-breaks mark in pole-vault, thrower Browning in hammer

COURIER STAFF REPORT
sports@madisoncourier.com

Hanover women's track & field set two school records and the men claimed three wins at their outdoor season openers over the weekend.

Erin Trimpe, a senior from New Palestine, broke her own school record in the women's pole vault at the Rose-Hulman Early Bird Meet on Saturday with a winning vault of 3.73 meters that is currently the top mark in NCAA Division III.

Erin Browning, a sophomore from Greensburg, broke the record in the women's hammer throw at the Murray State (Ky.) Margaret Simmons Invitational on Friday with a throw of 47.65 meters that was good for second in the event.

Hanover's men won three distance events at the Murray State meet. Jacob Hedrick, a senior from Memphis, Indiana, won the men's 5,000-meter run in 15:09.04 — just five seconds off his own school record — while Hayden Veach, a junior from Shelbyville, won the 1,500-meter run in 4:06.82 and Andrew Clegg, a sophomore from Indianapolis, won the 3,000 meter run in 10:30.80.

Other top finishes for the women at Murray State were: Arig Tong, second, 5,000 run, 18:16.79; Mackenzie Carroll, second, 400 dash, 1:05.23; Emily Clancy, third, pole vault, 3.18m; Mariah Grider, fourth, discus, 35.48m and fifth, hammer, 42.97m; Haley Huddleston, fourth, high jump, 1.50m; Riley Austin, fifth, high jump, 1.40m; and Amanda Stump, fifth, 3000 steeplechase, 12:34.52.

Other top finishes for the Hanover men at Murray State were: Samuel Pyle, third, 200 dash, 23.20; Darrell Payne, fourth, 200 dash, 23.26; Matt Young, fourth steeplechase, 11:26.54.

At Rose-Hulman, former Madison pole vaulter Nick Palmer, now a senior at Rose, was third in the pole vault at 4.27 meters. Hanover's Ethan Monnin was fifth in the pole vault at 4.27 meters.

The majority of the team competed at Murray State where Hanover's women placed fifth out of 11 teams with 59 points while the men were eighth with 56.5 points. Murray State won the women's meet with 319 points and Centre (Ky.) claimed the men's crown with 151.5 points.

Hanover will return to action again on Friday and Saturday for the two-day Transylvania Invitational.

Hanover baseball pounds 41 hits to go 1-2 in Wabash series

COURIER STAFF REPORT
sports@madisoncourier.com

Hanover baseball pounded out 41 hits over a three-game series but had only one win to show for it in a weekend tilt of games at Wabash.

Spencer Coop, a junior from Lexington, Kentucky, led the hit attack with 10 over the three games, including an impressive 6-for-7 performance in the opener won 17-8 by Hanover. The six hits ties the single-game mark set by current Hanover men's basketball coach Jon Miller back in 1996. Coop was 10-for-15 on the weekend with four doubles, four runs scored and two RBIs from the leadoff position.

The slugfest victory on Saturday proved to be Hanover's lone win on the weekend. The two teams combined for 25 runs and 32 hits over three hours and 40 minutes of play. Hanover's 17 runs mark the third time this season the team has produced double digit runs and is the highest single game total since an 18-7 win over Augustana (Ill.) in the 2015 season opener.

Hanover opened the game with four runs in the first but led only 7-3 entering the seventh inning when the Panthers exploded for five runs in the seventh, three in the eighth and two in the ninth to pull away.

Along with Coop, Grant Larimore went 3-for-5 with two doubles, four RBIs and two runs scored, Andrew Littlefield was 3-for-5 with three RBIs and two runs, Chase Sizemore was 2-for-3 with four RBIs, Tyler Fitch was 2-for-4 with a run and an RBI, and Ty Stover and Mark Walkenhorst each added doubles.

David Hermann (1-1) was the recipient of all of the offense, allowing just one earned run on six hits in five and a third innings with two strikeouts to get his first win of the season.

Hanover pounded out 15 more hits in Sunday's first game but lost 6-5 on a walkoff two-run double by Wabash's Eric Chavez in the bottom of the ninth. Back-to-back RBI singles by Sizemore and Josh Meszaros in the top half of the inning had given the Panthers the lead.

Walkenhorst went 3-for-4 with a run scored, Coop was 2-for-4 with a double and two runs scored, Larimore was 2-for-5 with a pair of doubles, Charlie Burton was 2-for-4 with two RBIs while Stover and Littlefield had

Indiana receives No. 1 seed in NIT

Indiana, Alabama TCU and UNC Greensboro have been named No. 1 seeds for the 32-team National Invitational Tournament, which begins today on the campuses of the higher seeds.

Indiana (17-15) was 54th in the NCAA's new NET rankings, a more analytical system that incorporated factors such as game results, strength of schedule, game location, scoring margin and net efficiency at both ends of the court.

However, the Hoosiers owned six Quadrant 1 wins to keep stay in the running amid all their losses, while Alabama (18-15) was 59th in NET and just 3-10 against Quadrant 1 opponents.

Also in the field are Clemson, Nebraska, Butler, Memphis, Georgetown, Arkansas, Providence, and Wichita State.

Indiana will host Saint Francis (Pa) (18-14) at 7 p.m. today. Butler (16-16) will visit Nebraska (18-16) at p .m. on Wednesday.

BRIDGE

WITH GOOD SHAPE, TRY TO DECLARE

To start today, look only at the North hand in the diagram. North-South are vulnerable. East opens two spades, South passes, and West raises to four spades. What should North do, if anything?

Yesterday, East (as he is sitting today) went down two in four spades after diamond to the ace, diamond ruff, club ruff, diamond ruff, club ruff. But that was a poor profit for North-South.

At the other table, North knew that although he had only 8 high-card points, his great distribution was worth a lot. Despite the unfavorable vulnerability, he intervened with four no-trump. This showed two five-card or longer suits.

After East passed, South advanced with five clubs, West doubled, North bid five diamonds, announcing the red suits, South gave preference to five hearts, and West doubled again. What did West lead?

West led a trump. It was an excellent choice, but the play went: heart to the nine, club ruff, diamond ace, diamond ruff, club ruff, diamond ruff, club ruff, diamond ruff, club jack. When West ruffed, declarer overruffed on the board, drew West's last trump with the heart ace and cashed the diamond eight to make the contract.

West shook his head, muttering about his 20-count. But as Albert Dormer, one of the best bridge writers ever, pointed out: "When three players are bidding vigorously, the fourth player with a strong balanced hand should proceed with caution: the others may all have freak distributions. It will often be better to support partner than to double for penalty."

Boomhower signs work: bio on Harrison

By ELISABETH MOORE

Ray E. Boomhower, senior editor at the Indiana Historical Society Press, was at Village Lights Bookstore on Main Street over the weekend to sign books and discuss his newest historical work, "Mr. President: A Life of Benjamin Harrison."

Boomhower, who has written previous titles about notable Hoosiers like Ernie Pyle and Gus Grissom, said he became interested in writing a narrative about Benjamin Harrison around December 2017 when he talked to an acquaintance who worked at the Benjamin Harrison Presidential Site in Indianapolis. From there, Boomhower researched all he could about Harrison and wrote this book in under a year, just in time for President's Day in 2018.

Boomhower said the the biggest fact about Harrison that stood out to him while writing this book was how Harrison fought during his service as a Union army general during the Civil War. Although Harrison was most known for his work as president, Boomhower said Harrison did much more for the United States than most people know.

Boomhower has worked at the Indiana Historical Society Press for nearly 32 years, where he has worked as a senior editor and written articles. "Mr. President: A Life of Benjamin Harrison" is the 16th book Boomhower has written and he said there are still more people and places that he would like to write about.

This book is a part of the Indiana Historical Society Press's Youth Biography Series that began in 2005, which has examined the lives of many Hoosiers. For more information about the Youth Biography Series or other Indiana Historical Society Press publications, call (317) 232-1882.

Shawe's class competition helps restock food pantry

Courier staff report

Shawe Memorial Jr./Sr. High School last week had a food drive to help stock the Prince of Peace Parish St. Vincent de Paul Food Pantry.

To help collect more food for the drive during the Lenten season, Shawe sponsored a competition between the grades to bring in the most items per student to win a pizza lunch and a trip to Laser Command.

Throughout the week, the senior class carried a steady lead. Each day of the drive, the food amounts brought in hit a new high and every class took a significant jump in who brought in the most food.

At the end of the drive, the junior class of 2020 won with a contributed total of 972 items from the 19 students in the class. Shawe plans to make a plaque for the winning class and to make this food drive an annual tradition.

The total of collected food was 2,800 items. Throughout the competition, there were triva questions and other events that students participated in to win or lose more food cans. Because of these events, the second place team was allowed to join the winners on the field trip.

Second place was the senior class of 27 students with 849 items. Third place was the freshman class of 25 students and 349 items. Fourth place was the sophmore class of 17 students with 217 items. Fifth place was the 7th grade class with 253 items. Sixth place was the 8th grade class with 158 items.

The junior class at Shawe Memorial Jr./Sr. High School won the recent food drive the school held, which won them a pizza lunch and a field trip to Laser Command. (Submitted photo)

Preservation division looks for input

The Indiana Department of Natural Resources Division of Historic Preservation and Archaeology is seeking public input through an online survey that should take 10 to 15 minutes to complete. This input will help the historic preservation office to revise "Indiana's Cultural Resources Management Plan" for 2020 to 2026.

This plan will help local preservationists, citizens and natural resources staff in their efforts to preserve Indiana's heritage resources. Feedback from this online survey will ensure that the preservation programs and expenditure of federal funds are responsive to the needs of Indiana.

To take the survey, go to www.in.gov/dnr/historic/10147.htm

Group members ask for volunteer help

Annie Lane

Dear Annie: I am an officer in an old but still active community cemetery with graves dating back to at least the 1800s and with plenty of available space.

We have the usual slate of officers and board of directors. We advertise our public meetings, as directed in our bylaws, but they are poorly attended. The handful of interested parties who attend these meetings are saddled with the issues of insurance, locating graves, hiring gravediggers, finding and awarding mowing contracts, driveway upkeep, tree trimming, brush removal along our borders, upkeep of our small meeting building, and whatever other needs arise.

A few years ago, when a burial was scheduled and our hilly driveway was very washed-out, two of us — women in our 60s — gathered rocks by hand to fill in the big ruts and then sat on the ground to put those rocks in some of the ruts in our driveway.

Very few folks seem to appreciate and support our volunteer efforts. Most lot owners never attend meetings and never send a donation. These are the folks who do not hesitate to call us or write to us with their complaints.

We didn't ask for these responsibilities. We inherited our feeling of responsibility and respect from our parents, grandparents and beyond. We would welcome a helping hand with paperwork, contracts and decisions.

Like the case with all volunteer organizations, donations would be welcome, but more important is our need for help. Fortunately, we are able to pay someone to mow, but even that brings complaints when the grassy hillside is wet and too slippery to mow.

How can we spur the interest of these folks? — Who's Going to Do It When We're Gone?

Dear Who's: Most obviously — and most importantly — you need to ask, and ask often. Few people share your innate sense of responsibility and service. Most people need to be reminded that there are opportunities out there for them to make their communities better places.

And that is how you should frame volunteering — as an opportunity, not a chore. One way to make volunteers feel like the valuable parts of your organization that they are is to give them titles. Come up with names for various positions that you need. The specificity will help people better understand what they'd be doing and offer more of a sense of purpose.

Lastly, I want to commend you and your fellow volunteers for all the hard work you've put into caring for this resting place. Thank you. It's selflessness such as yours that lights up the world.

Dear Annie: The woman who complained about her husband's agreeing to a wedding in their backyard has potentially more to worry about than stranger guests using their home's restrooms. She should check her city's ordinances about noise and consider what the reception will entail. Also, she should insist that her husband contact the company with which he has homeowner's insurance to be sure he is covered for possible injury on the property. — Jane in Vacaville

Dear Jane: Excellent points about the legal precautions one should take when hosting a large gathering at one's home (especially when alcohol will be consumed). Thank you for writing.

Reds' manager Bell willing to consider non-traditional moves

By GARY SCHATZ
Associated Press

GOODYEAR, Ariz. — David Bell used a relief pitcher in center field and a catcher at shortstop, showing a willingness to try unusual strategies in his first spring training as Cincinnati Reds manager.

"This whole camp has been different," starting pitcher Anthony DeSclafani said.

Bell, the third generation of a prominent Reds baseball family, has allowed his coaching staff to make significant changes. Pitching coach Derek Johnson, on Milwaukee's staff the previous three seasons, has pitchers playing soccer as part of their conditioning drills instead of running foul-pole to foul-pole.

"You can see them having fun and get their conditioning in," Bell said.

Johnson also has his staff throwing more frequently, though fewer pitches each time.

One of the most notable moves by Bell is allowing reliever Michael Lorenzen to both pitch and play center field — Lorenzen's position in college — during the same game. Lorenzen has lobbied for the dual role, which is unusual in the major leagues. Lorenzen is getting into condition by chasing fly balls in the outfield during batting practice.

David Bell

"It's pretty cool they are letting me do this," Lorenzen said.

Kyle Farmer, drafted as a catcher, has played shortstop. Bell intends to use infielder Connor Joe as a catcher, a position Joe hasn't played since college.

Bell has used extreme shifts that employ four outfielders and leave one side of the infield open.

Reds players have welcomed the changes, especially the individually tailored plans for getting players ready.

"They're asking us how we feel and what we need physically to continue to get better," reliever Jared Hughes said. "If guys need a day or if they need extra work, there is a really good system of communication."

After four straight seasons of at least 94 losses, the Reds are ready to consider different approaches.

"Why not try new stuff?" second baseman Scooter Gennett said. "We have the ability to do it. I think Lorenzen should definitely be out there. I think he's nothing but prove that he can hit, that he can throw. He can do it all."

Bell's willingness to try new things also fits with a trend of nontraditional methods.

"The game gets better when people think outside the box because you push the limits of what the game could be," Hughes said. "They are looking at how we can get better and take that extra step. If you get 2 percent better over 162 games, that's three extra wins and that could be the difference."

•NCAA

Or maybe even from Gonzaga, whose very smallness — enrollment 5,200 — seems to, in some corners, eternally mask the reality that this is a big-time program with one potential lottery pick on the roster (Rui Hachimura), another in the NBA (Zach Collins), a 21-year string of trips to the tournament and, now, its third No. 1 seeding in seven years?

The confetti will fall the evening of Monday, April 8 inside U.S. Bank Stadium in Minneapolis.

Then, on April 9, the focus shifts from courtside back to the courtroom, the negotiating table and, in some cases, the jail cell.

More investigations, the likes of which exposed LSU's troubles, along with more corruption trials involving more assistant coaches and other players in the college recruiting game, will come later this spring.

The NBA and its union will try to inch closer to ending the one and done rule (A player must be at least 19 and a year removed from college before entering the NBA) that receives more than its (fair?) share of blame for the NCAA's troubles.

Less promising are hopes for real reform out of the NCAA's recently suggested package of fixes, or from the aftermath of a ruling in U.S. District Court that essentially told the association to continue with business as usual when it came to compensating players with pennies compared to the billions they bring in.

But forget all that for now.

One and done is what gave us Zion and his freshman teammates, RJ Barrett and Cameron Reddish, for a single, precious season at Duke.

It gave us Kentucky, a 2 seed in the Midwest, and its freshman-enabling coach, John Calipari.

It also gave us the dozens of programs that don't, or can't, consistently attract that kind of talent. Those teams are, in many cases, cheered as underdogs for that very reason.

Their goal this March appears straightforward, though anything but simple: Assuming his shoes hold up, someone's got to stop Williamson before he exits stage right, never to look back, on his way to the NBA.
